Improved resolution in depth imaging through reflection static corrections derived from model-based moveout

Dennis Ellison[1], Greg Cameron[2], Kris Innanen[1]
CREWES-University of Calgary[1]
Thrust Belt Imaging[2]

Summary

Accuracy of the NMO assumption is valid when the moveout on data is near-hyperbolic but deviates when the moveout is more complicated. The moveout assumption for reflection statics is optimized for time migration but can lead to an incorrect velocity model for depth migration—where reflection statics should use a moveout calculated from the depth velocity model.