

Controls on the oil and gas potential of impact structures

John G. Spray

Planetary and Space Science Centre, University of New Brunswick, Fredericton, NB E3B 5A3, Canada

Summary

Impact structures developed in sedimentary basins possess the potential to develop, host and trap hydrocarbons due to the preferential structural conditions and impact-related rock types developed. This presentation will provide an overview of these features.